The Department of Communication Studies at the University of Georgia seeks to fill a full-time tenure-track faculty position in Health Communication at the rank of Assistant Professor beginning Fall 2018. The successful candidate will examine the role of communication in health disparities. We seek a quantitative or qualitative social scientist who studies health disparities at the interpersonal, community or campaign level. The successful candidate will contribute to our teaching mission by offering classes in health communication, culture, and disparities at both the graduate and undergraduate level. A Ph.D. in Communication or a related field is required by the time of appointment. Demonstrated research and teaching competence is required. The potential to seek external funding is essential.

The department (www.comm.uga.edu) has a competitive and nationally ranked M.A. and Ph.D. program and an active research faculty with a record of extramural funding, scholarly publication, and teaching excellence. UGA has a Center for Health & Risk Communication, a College of Public Health (http://www.publichealth.uga.edu/), an Institute for Social and Behavioral Research (https://oibr.uga.edu/), and a campus of the Medical College of Georgia (http://medicalpartnership.usg.edu/about/article/about_us). UGA is a land and sea grant institution located in Athens (www.visitathensga.com) 70 miles northeast of Atlanta and is easily accessible to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

To apply, please send a letter of application, vitae, evidence of research accomplishments and teaching excellence, and names and contact information for three references. Applications received by November 1, 2017 will receive full consideration. Electronic applications should be submitted to: http://facultyjobs.uga.edu/postings/2804. Correspondence can be directed to Dr. Jennifer Monahan, Health Communication Search Chair, Department of Communication Studies, Caldwell Hall, University of Georgia, Athens, Georgia 30602. Her e-mail address is: commjob@uga.edu.
