Certificates Offered By One Academic Unit

School/College/Unit: Franklin College of Arts and Sciences/Hugh Hodgson School of Music

Department/Division: Composition and Theory

1. Purpose and Educational Objectives

The purpose of the certificate is to provide specific, hands-on instruction in the art and science of composing music for film, video games, and other media. The film and television industry in Georgia is experiencing robust, unprecedented growth, and there is a strong demand for these skills. This certificate will help prepare our students to fill a unique need in the job market while teaching them a valuable skill set that can also be useful in a variety of other musical settings.

Educational objectives include:

- Learning to compose, arrange, and orchestrate music for media
- Learning to work with technology to record, mix, edit, and produce scores
- Learning the aesthetics and role of music in various media
- Hands-on production of music to accompany film, television, video games, and other visual media

This certificate fulfills the mission of the institution by preparing students to fully participate in the global economies and societies of the twenty-first century. As the film/television industry in Georgia grows, supplying music and musicians to support this industry fulfills our land-grant, sea-grant mission to promote economic development in the state and meet the needs of its citizens. This program would be a unique program in the state, and a fairly rare program in the nation, providing the institution with national and international recognition and signaling our commitment to providing creative endeavors, exploring new theories, and enhancing cultural life. The nature of this work allows the institution to continue to promote cultural, ethnic, gender, and racial diversity through projects, music, and media that tell the stories of all peoples and cultures and engage those that have been historically underserved by academia.

2. Need for the Program

This certificate fills a very specific and growing need in the current musical job market. The production of music for media is a thriving industry, and the skills involved are useful in a range of musical settings. Students completing the certificate will be strong candidates for jobs in this industry, but they will also gain important skills in recording, editing, and production. As the film, television, and video game industry grow in the state of Georgia, this certificate will help UGA be a part of this growth.

The University of Georgia recently launched a new Master of Fine Arts in Film, Television, and Digital Media that seeks to produce highly trained filmmakers. This certificate will help complement and support that new program by providing music—a critical and essential component of any media production—and musicians to accompany this work.

3. Student Demand

- a. Provide documentation of evidence of student demand for this program, which may include a student survey.

A survey was distributed to the entire student body in the School of Music asking the students to select all statements that apply to them from the following criteria:

- 1) I think it is a good idea for the HHSOM to institute a film/media scoring certificate.
- 2) Having a film/media certificate will be valuable to me in my intended profession.
- 3) I am interested in enrolling in a film/media scoring certificate.
- 4) I know people who would be interested in enrolling in a film/media scoring certificate.
- 5) If a film/media scoring certificate had been available when I began my degree, I would have enrolled.

Results of the survey show broad interest from students overall and graduate students specifically (note that we are also separately proposing a similar undergraduate certificate):

Question	Overall Yes	Graduate Yes
1	98.5%	100%
2	63.6%	53.8%
3	62.1%	46.2%
4	51.5%	53.8%
5	57.8%	53.8%

- b. Provide evidence that demand will be sufficient to sustain reasonable enrollment.

Based on the results of the survey, we are confident there will be significant interest in this certificate. Our students are hungry to be as marketable as possible in an ever-changing and challenging musical environment.

Our composition and music theory faculty have also collected strong anecdotal evidence of demand. In particular, there has been notable student interest in media composition expressed through the annual interviews the area conducts with prospective majors for at least the past decade. And there has been increasing inquiry about opportunities for study in media composition by students from outside the composition major and outside the Hodgson School of Music. This interest has been consistent for several years; and it is likely, given current trends, to only grow stronger in the future.

- c. To what extent will minority student enrollments be greater than, less than, or equivalent to the proportion of minority students in the total student body?

With this certificate drawing on more commercially minded music incorporating world music and jazz music with orchestral music, it will naturally attract students who feel that traditional classical music is not reflective of their cultures and backgrounds. Much of the work may also center around films and documentaries that feature underrepresented cultures; the current classes have already done extensive work with documentaries relating to cultural and racial issues here on campus, and are currently working on music for a major documentary celebrating fifty years of Pamoja organizations on the UGA campus.

4. Program of Study

5. Model Program and Accreditation

- a. Identify any model programs, accepted disciplinary standards, and accepted curricular practices against which the proposed program could be judged. Evaluate the extent to which the proposed curriculum is consistent with these external points of reference and provide a rationale for significant inconsistencies and differences that may exist.

At the moment, there are very few programs similar to the graduate certificate we are proposing. Additionally, there are only a few institutions that offer a master's degree in this topic, and a couple of professional schools that offer stand-alone certificates with no degree. The uniqueness of this potential certificate would be a strong advantage for the University of Georgia in the marketplace, as it would offer hands-on coursework focused on the specific skills of media scoring to students earning a graduate degree in a related field. Of note is the fact that other graduate programs are geographically distant from the film and television industry that is thriving in the state of Georgia.

In proposing a Graduate Certificate that could overlay existing graduate degrees at UGA in music, theatre, film, and other related fields, we are intending both to attract a diverse pool of students and to acknowledge the multi-disciplinary realities of contemporary commercial media. We believe this approach will be more valuable to a broader audience of UGA graduate students than the stand-alone certificates and degrees found in most of the descriptions below.

Indiana University's Jacob School of Music offers a Graduate Certificate in Music Scoring for Visual Media. <https://music.indiana.edu/degrees-programs/areas-of-study/visual-scoring.html>. This 12-credit hour program requires work in topics classes related to music scoring for visual media and a capstone project. Our proposal would be similar to this, but differ in the specificity of coursework, as well as the available elective work in film history, film genres, and broader aesthetic topics. Indiana University also offers a Master of Music in Music Scoring for Visual Media, which requires 18 hours of specific coursework in scoring for visual media.

New York University offers a Master of Music in Music Theory and Composition: Screen Scoring. <https://steinhardt.nyu.edu/degree/mm-music-theory-and-composition-screen-> scoring/curriculum. This degree requires 15 credits in screen scoring work and also includes work in composition lessons and general music electives. The screen scoring courses are similar to those found in this proposal.

The University of Miami (Florida) Frost School of Music offers a Master of Music in Media Scoring and Production. <https://bulletin.miami.edu/graduate-academic-programs/music/music-media-industry/mm-in-media-writing-and-production/#text>. This degree requires 18 hours of work in Media Scoring and/or Production, with classes similar to those in this proposal.

The Berklee College of Music offers an Online Master of Music in Film Scoring: <https://online.berklee.edu/music-degrees/graduate/film-scoring>. There are 36 credits in Film Scoring classes required for this degree, with coursework similar to that found in this proposal. Berklee also offers several stand-alone certificates (mostly 9 credits) in related topics, though they don't require a completed bachelor's degree for enrollment.

The University of Southern California Thornton School of Music offers a two-semester Master of Music in Screen Scoring. <https://uscscoring.com/>. While their website does not detail credit-hour breakdowns, there are 18 courses required for this program, all similar in nature to those found in this proposal. It should be noted that USC did offer a graduate certificate in the past, but recently replaced that certificate with this master's program.

The proposed certificate does not seek to replicate a full degree in the subject, but the 12-credit program of study would emulate a substantial percentage of the media-scoring coursework found in these exemplary degree programs. This program would fill a unique need in the state and in the nation, and we believe that demand would be high.

- b. If program accreditation is available, provide an analysis of the ability of the program to satisfy the curricular standards of such specialized accreditation.

Certificate programs are not reviewed by the National Association of Schools of Music, our main accrediting agency. All of the coursework, however, aligns with current standards of practice and goals as expressed in the NASM Handbook.

Dear Committee Members and Colleagues,

This letter serves to express my full support for the attached proposal for a Graduate Certificate in Film and Media Scoring. This certificate has been discussed at length by our faculty and was given unanimous approval by our Graduate Committee.

The proposed certificate will fill an important need in the marketplace while providing a unique and attractive option that is appealing to potential recruits. The state of Georgia has a thriving film and television production industry, and all of those productions need music. Establishing this certificate would make the University of Georgia the only institution in the state to offer such a program, and one of only a very few in the nation to offer any formalized program in film and media scoring. By supplying labor for a growing local industry, it fulfills our land-grant mission to support the state's economic growth and development. The certificate capitalizes on the strength of our faculty in music composition, including recent hires with extensive private-sector experience in this field. This is a certificate we can easily implement with existing faculty and structural resources.

While the certificate will train motivated students to enter this growing marketplace as film and media composers, the coursework will provide other students with valuable skills in music technology and production—skills that will be applicable and useful to a wide range of musical careers in the 21st century. It will also help provide resources to the new and growing Master of Fine Arts degree in Film, Television, and Digital Media.

We are excited about the collaborations in this certificate between the Hugh Hodgson School of Music, the Department of Theatre and Film Studies, the Grady College of Journalism and Mass Communication, and the Terry College of Business. Involving courses across all of those programs will help give students a broad, well-grounded perspective and strengthen cross-campus relationships.

This is an exciting and unique opportunity to further position the Hugh Hodgson School of Music as a regional and national leader, and we expect robust interest and growth as the certificate is established. The proposal has my full, unqualified support, and I would be happy to answer any questions as needed during the approval process.

Sincerely,

Peter J. Jutras, Ph.D, NCTM
